

XERES Maritime Interdiction System

XERES has been in service with the Royal Navy across all Operational Areas and is fully supportable for future requirements.

XERES incorporates automated navigation, position tracking, long range video and data links between a command vessel and deployable remote assets, including interdiction craft and boarding parties. Designed and developed by Drumgrange, with a full support facility based within its Portland Facility.

SYSTEM

XERES provides secure voice communications together with video and data links via an integrated communications network linking the command vessel with the interdiction craft and deployed personnel. Enhanced communications, accurate navigational and positional information and data collection, enables the command team to update with instant awareness of asset location and the developing tactical situation.

The system allows personnel and assets to be deployed with greater safety, confidence and effectiveness, offering a tremendous leap forward in operational capability.

Future enhancements are under development and a wide variety of open system connectivity and boarding party options can be specified.
